Social care for disabled adults is in as much crisis as support for elderly people – so why is the government silent about it? | John Harris

Guardian (Politics) · Mon, 05 Oct 2026 05:00:48 GMT

Working-age adults such as my son, who is autistic, face a fragmented and unreliable system, yet ministers talk only of a national care service for older people. Seemingly brilliant conference speeches are often followed by a hangover, and so it has arguably proved with Andy Burnham's. It was, it has to be said, something
