[The Guardian] As Miatta ignites the speaker's gas-fuelled inferno, Reform show up as snowflakes | John Crace

Wed, 21 Oct 2026 17:06:41 GMT

The energy secretary's trip north provokes Hoyle's futile rage, while ITV's exposé leaves Zia Yusuf immensely sad When is a licence not a licence? When it's a new licence that is an old licence. After months of faffing around – there were the small matters of a party conference and a byelection to negotiate first – the

[The Guardian] Can UK pop cut immigration and stop the boats? I suppose we'll find out with GB News Music Radio | John Harris

Wed, 21 Oct 2026 14:58:55 GMT

An ‘all British, all day’ station is a nativist dream come true – but good luck with the playlist. And anyway: how many artists will want to be on Farage FM? If you want a quintessential “It wouldn’t happen now” story, try this. Two months before Margaret Thatcher became prime minister in May 1979, a national Militant

[The Guardian] From strife-torn France to the UK, rightwing populists win when they stir chaos while promising order | Rafael Behr

Wed, 21 Oct 2026 05:00:03 GMT

Marine Le Pen and Donald Trump are arsonists who play at being firefighters. Nigel Farage is finding that act harder to pull off in Andy Burnham’s Britain An election where one side represents chaos will nearly always be won by the party that promises order instead. Public fatigue after years of turbulent Tory rule acc
