Senior Labour figures downplay public appetite for general election

City AM (News) · Sun, 28 Jun 2026 12:34:08 +0000

Senior Labour figures have downplayed the British public's appetite for a general election to secure any major policy shifts under a new leader and have insisted the party is united behind Andy Burnham. Talking to Sky News on Sunday, housing secretary Steve Reed suggested Keir Starmer's possible successor would i

Two prime ministerial resignations, 10 years apart: 'Brexit represents a kind of faultline in British history'

Guardian (Politics) · Sun, 28 Jun 2026 09:00:05 GMT

Keir Starmer's announcement on Monday was the latest convulsion since the Brexit vote. This week, as we marked 10 years since the referendum, our former national news editor Dan Sabbagh looked back to the start of Britain's ongoing political chaos. Our political sketch writer John Crace has dubbed it the "podium of doo

Labour has abandoned the missions that brought it to power. Here's how Burnham could revive them. | Mariana Mazzucato

Guardian (Politics) · Sun, 28 Jun 2026 05:00:02 GMT

With a new prime minister incoming, Labour faces a fundamental question about its economic vision. As Keir Starmer stands down as prime minister and attention turns toward Andy Burnham, the current moment should not be reduced to a story of personalities. The question that matters is strategy, and the Labour party has t
